GOVERNOR

Accessing Public Lands

Accessing public lands for hunting, fishing and recreation is our birthright. I love Idaho and I am in constant awe of its majestic mountains, beautiful rivers and streams, and stunning views. Idahoans have a reverence for our beautiful state and know how to manage, care for and provide multiple uses for the lands that we love. But over time, the federal government and environmentalists have made our land less accessible.

That's why I've fought against federal mismanagement of our public lands by sponsoring bills like the Self-Sufficient Community Lands Act. I also co-sponsored the Protecting Local Communities from Executive Overreach Act to stop the federal government from forcing national monuments down our throats without consulting with the people of Idaho. As governor, I'll advance a true multiple-use agenda for state and federal public lands in Idaho, one that keeps our lands open for everyone, and economically productive.

“Accessing public lands for hunting, fishing and recreation is our birthright.”
